Introduction

About the Program

English — Part A and English — Part B are a cumulative program of thirty-six units designed to give upper elementary students a basic curriculum in grammar, writing skills, and word analysis. The material is presented in language that students understand and use every day. The directions are simple enough to make it possible for students to be self-sufficient much of the time. The thirty-six one-week units fall into four general categories:

English — Part A

1. Writing skills — sentences, paragraphs, and letters (Units 1 to 7)
2. Usage — capitals and punctuation (Units 8 to 16)

English — Part B

1. Word analysis — vowels and consonants, prefixes and suffixes, synonyms and antonyms (Units 17 to 24)
2. Parts of speech — nouns, verbs, pronouns, adjectives, adverbs, articles, prepositions, conjunctions, and interjections (Units 25 to 36)

Because the program is cumulative, Part A should be used before Part B. It would be possible, however, to use the last review test in Part A as a pretest for Part B. If the student passes this test, then Part B can be introduced.

Each workbook page is a self-contained lesson which is part of a six-page unit. Pages one through four of each unit introduce and teach one new skill or concept. The fifth page is a test on the material learned in the unit. The test is followed by a cumulative review covering the skills learned in all the units up to that point.

Score Boxes and Progress Chart

Each page has a two-part box in the top-right corner. The number printed in the lower half of the box is the number of questions on the page; the number of questions the student gets right can be written in the top half of the box after the page is corrected. This gives the student's grade as a fraction. This Teacher's Manual indicates the number of points assigned to each section of the page; this is to aid you in arriving at the total score. The boxes are intended to get students to focus on which problems they got wrong, rather than on a letter grade or percent. However, scores on tests can easily be converted into percents or letter grades if that seems desirable.

Inside the back cover of each book is an individual progress chart for the unit test scores and the review test scores. I recommend that you involve your students in recording their own scores on this chart and in plotting their own progress during the year.

Mastery Learning Approach

Since the units in English — Part A and English — Part B build on each other, they are ideally suited to the mastery learning approach developed by Benjamin Bloom at the University of Chicago. In brief Bloom's theory is that if we insist that students achieve mastery of skills before moving along, they will become increasingly successful in subsequent units. Bloom's research indicates that it's not good enough for a student to get a C or a 60% on a test. At that level of competence, the student doesn't have sufficient grasp of the skill to use it in future work. By insisting that students score eighty percent or higher on the unit tests, we prepare them for greater success in the future.

I recommend that you push students to score eighty percent or better on the tests. Their level of mastery can be displayed graphically on the progress charts at the back of the workbooks. A full box is high mastery, an A; a half box is mastery, a B; a diagonal line is below mastery, below eighty percent. If students score below mastery, they need individual help from you, a classmate who mastered the unit, or some other tutor. Then they should have a chance to take the test again. Bloom has found that if students are retaught skills in a different way, using a new approach, most of them master the material the second time around. According to Bloom, if we persist with students at this early stage, giving them two or more chances to master basic skills, then teaching these students will get progressively easier as time goes on. They will have both the prerequisite skills and the self-confidence to master future units.

Review Tests

At the end of each unit except the first is a review which covers all the skills learned up to that point in the weekly units. These review tests help students retain what they have learned, build mastery of the material, and gain confidence in what they know they can do. The reviews are not intended to be comprehensive reviews of everything in each unit, but rather to be a quick reminder of some of the essential points and terminology that have been covered. The questions are not designed to introduce new material or to trip students up; they are meant to foster student success.

Because the review sheets are cumulative, they get longer and more involved with each week. However, repetition of earlier skills and gradual addition of new skills allows students to score very well on the review tests throughout the year and end up with an impressive mastery of the thirty-six units. Note that it is possible for these reviews to become very difficult and threatening to students if the groundwork is not carefully laid and feedback is not immediately forthcoming on errors made in each review test. Students who fail review tests or who score below mastery level should be taken through their mistakes individually and given extra practice on the items that are giving them trouble.

Naturally the material introduced in earlier units gets the most repetition in the course of the year's reviews. The sequence of units was deliberately arranged so that sentence structure, punctuation, and proofreading skills would receive the most attention for the longest period of time. By the end of the year, students should quickly be able to pick out sixteen different kinds of common errors in sentences and to make the necessary corrections.

If you decide to use these reviews as reinforcement or tests at the end of each unit, you will need to follow the sequence of units exactly. The reviews are arranged so that each new one adds the skill from the previous unit and includes all the preceding skills in the sequence. Only at the end of the program, where there is not enough space to include all skills, do some skills appear in alternate weeks. The units on parts of speech (25 to 36) contain their own built-in review and do not appear on the review tests until the very end.

Suggested Use

I consider English to be only a part of a good language arts curriculum; it is the bare bones of grammar and usage. The program should be used in conjunction with a number of other materials and teaching methods, not in isolation from them. Other components would include journal writing, precis writing, creative writing, poetry, letter writing, word games, charades, vocabulary building, oral reading, group reading, play reading, and independent reading.

The books are ideally suited to fill an entire school year of 180 days or 36 weeks, if you choose to use them this way. If one workbook page is done a day and mixed with other materials and activities, the amount of retention from day to day and week to week will be maximized. Doing the units too quickly may reduce the effectiveness of the program and lead to an in-one-ear-out-the-other phenomenon. You may find, however, that some students are able to cover the units in a day or two and still maintain a consistently high mastery level on the unit and review tests. There may be other students who need more than one day per page. The pace at which this workbook is used will depend on the needs of your students.

For the most part the units are flexible. They can be started on any day of the week; they can be used as class assignments or as homework assignments; they can be used for group instruction, individual or small-group work, contracts, or reinforcement drill in conjunction with textbooks or other materials. You might have the whole class go through the units together, or you might have individual students or small groups of students do only the units which a pretest indicates they haven't mastered.

Another possibility is to give the end-of-the-year final review test as a diagnostic test at the beginning of the year. Some students would find it quite difficult, but it would give them a clear idea of where they were headed and increase their feeling of competence as they mastered the material over the course of the year.

History

English — Part A and Part B evolved from my teaching experience, starting in 1970, in the sixth-grade classes in an inner-city, Boston public school. I began with the system's requirements, a lack of decent textbooks and other materials, and a need to decentralize my classroom by giving students material which would be more or less self-instructing in small groups. I wrote worksheets the night before classes and got feedback the next day if my task analysis, directions, or content were deficient. For the next three years, based on my students' success or difficulty with the material, I continually revised the worksheets and worked on the sequence. Finally I wrote up a polished version of the book in 1975. This package attracted attention from other teachers, and I sold copies to people all over the country. The material has been used successfully from fourth grade suburban classes to adult education classes in prisons. It has been most widely used in regular sixth-grade classes and remedial middle- and high-school classes.

I hope these books are helpful to you and your students. I'd be delighted to hear any feedback that occurs to you as you use the program. Good luck.

This country has many hundreds of missiles ready to fire at our enemies at any moment if there is a war. Each missile has a nuclear bomb in it which is powerful enough to destroy a whole city.

Some of the missiles are buried in silos underground. These can be fired from underground by opening huge metal doors at ground level. Being underground protects the missiles from being destroyed by enemy missiles.

Other missiles are carried by submarines that are constantly cruising under the oceans. These are the hardest missiles for enemies to destroy because they don't know where the subs are.

There are now enough missiles with bombs to destroy the earth several times. The United States, the Soviet Union, and other countries are trying to agree on ways to control the use of these weapons.
